

EXPLORING TO PUSH BOUNDARIES

GALLERY

Ref: alainhubert_07rr_0001

Polar Explorer Alain Hubert during the Arctic Arc expedition in 2007.

Credits: © Rolex/René Robert

Ref: alohner

Annelies Lohner, a pioneering young climber who set up a Swiss expedition to the Himalayas. During the trip, the first ascents of several summits were achieved.

Credits: © Rolex

Ref: cjanin_147304_highres

Christine Janin on her 1997 expedition to the North Pole, unaided and without the assistance of dogs. She was the first woman to achieve this feat.

Credits: ©EPA

Ref: ekagge_0051_r

In 1992–1993, Erling Kagge traversed the South Pole alone and unsupported, on a journey of over 50 days.

Credits: Courtesy of Erling Kagge

Ref: elisabethstation_ah07_001

Established thanks to Alain Hubert, Princess Elisabeth Antarctica is the first research station to operate entirely on renewable energies.

Credits: ©Alain Hubert

Ref: everest_1953

Sir Edmund Hillary and Tenzing Norgay on their climb to the top of Everest.

Credits: © Alfred Gregory/Royal Geographic Society

Ref: eviesturs_1hotsesummit_1994

Ed Viesturs climbed Lhotse in 1994. Having summited Everest seven days earlier, he was acclimatized to make a fast ascent in three days.

Credits: ©Rob Hall

Ref: explorer-1947_21rg_001

A Rolex Oyster Perpetual watch worn on the Swiss expedition to the Gangotri mountain range in 1947.

Credits: ©Rolex/Régis Golay

Contact sheet

EXPLORING TO PUSH BOUNDARIES

Ref: explorer-1953_21rg_001

Oyster Perpetual Explorer provided by Rolex and worn by a member of the British expedition.

Credits: ©Rolex/Régis Golay

Ref: fsauro_cuevarco-6383

Oköimo Yeuta caves in Auyan Tepui, Venezuela, a site studied by Francesco Sauro.

Credits: ©Alessio Romeo

Ref: halleyresearchstation_05

The members of the expedition lived at the Halley Research Station in Antarctica for several months at a time.

Credits: ©Rolex

Ref: htazieff_m1011682_inc_008

Haroun Tazieff on Etna around 1970.

Credits: ©Patrick JARNOUX/
PARISMATCH/SCOOP

Ref: oysterperpetual_1953_1806jdm-9074

The expedition watch: An Oyster Perpetual identical to those worn by members of the British expedition in 1953.

Credits: ©Rolex/Jean-Daniel Meyer

Ref: rgjeldnes_186535_r

During polar expeditions, a watch is crucial for setting a schedule and following a routine, explains Rune Gjeldnes.

Credits: © Rolex/Rune Gjeldnes